A Tenth Anniversary

On Tuesday last the Sisterhood of Holy Blossom Synagogue happily and auspiciously celebrated its tenth birthday with Mrs. Barnett R. Brickner, its founder and first president as the guest speaker. It was a gala occasion indeed, and inspiring it was to feel that in the short space of a single decade the seed so tenderly and lovingly planted had grown into so sturdy and worthy a tree. All but a few of that handful of lone pioneers who gathered together to form the Holy Blossom Sisterhood were present; but their numbers had already multiplied more than tenfold, and surely this growth of the past few years contains the promise of an even richer harvest yet to be.

Following an excellent report by Mrs. Nathan Phillips, its president for the past two years, and because of her noble leadership, elected yet again for another term, following this report replete with rare enthusiasm and manifesting throughout a spirit of sacrificial service, the "Autograph Temple Tree", a new venture for the Sisterhood, was dedicated. This lovely painting of a leafless tree, originated by Mrs. Gussie L. Hartman of Chicago, was unveiled by Mrs. Egmont L. Frankel who read a message from its originator explaining its purpose. As this tree puts on the leaves, inscribed with the names of generous friends, it is hoped that Holy Blossom's new synagogue and school will come nearer to realization, and that its Etz Chayim, its tree of life, and faith, and Jewish aspiration will be strengthened.

The joyous birthday party culminated in stirring address delivered by Mrs. Brickner who so capably sketched the sorrowful plight of world Jewry and who so eloquently pleaded for an earnest, a courageous, self-conscious and forthright avowal of our Jewish identity and a consecrated re-dedication of our lives to Jewish values and ideals—Adonoy, Sholom and Tsedokah—as the sole answer to the ever-increasing problem of Jewish survival. Her answer to the challenge which arises today on every hand—in Russia, Poland, Roumania, Germany, even in Palestine, and these Western lands—reminded us of the glowing words of Judah Leon Magnes, "Wherever the Jew is, there is the Jewish problem, and it is part of Jewish destiny to face that problem bravely, and to make it mean something good for mankind." So urged our ever popular and gracious "ex rebbitzin" ('ex', only in physical distance, but not in spirit) as a grand climax to a notable and happy tenth anniversary party which presaged so much—worthy as the past may have been—for an even more gratifying decade to come.

The Bnai Brith Convention

This week end, May 16th, 17th and 18th, Toronto is to be the busy scene of the Seventy Ninth Annual Convention of the Bnai Brith District Grand Lodge, No. 1, which will bring into our midst many noted visitors long prominent in this venerable and worthy organization. Beginning quite properly with religious services at Goel Tzedec and Holy Blossom Synagogues, both of which have designated the forthcoming Sabbath as Bnai Brith Sabbath, the three days will be crowded with meetings, dinners, and speeches, of course; all devoted to the intensification of Jewish loyalty and the enhancing of Jewish achievement, and culminating in the banquet to be held on Monday evening when the Toronto Jewish community will be privileged to hear Dr. Nathan Krass, one of America's ablest and most eloquent rabbis. We are honored indeed to be the hosts of this splendid gathering, and it is hoped that all our fellow Jews of Toronto will avail themselves of the opportunity thus presented to participate in the Convention programs.

Another Birthday

Also to be held this week end—though scarcely conflicting, since the clientele is, with few exceptions, not the same—is the first Annual Meeting of the Toronto Council of the Fellowship of Reconciliation. This mere infant—just a year old this week—has already attracted the attention of our entire community by its dedication to the loftiest ideals of Brotherhood, Equity, and Peace, and by the courage which its leaders have evinced during the past year in their zeal to safeguard the inalienable rights of their fellowmen. Seeking by the pacific means of reconcilliation to secure perfect fellowship between the various nations, classes, races, religions and individuals upon this earth, it quite naturally has aroused certain antagonisms among those who profit most by the flagrant denial of man's fundamental privileges as a child of the universal Father. But none can impugn its aim and purpose which are in consonance with the finest of our religious ideals. Its All Day Peace Conference of last Armistice Day, with its innovation of the decoration of the graves of Heroes of Peace, was an achievement, the ramifications of which will be felt for a long time to come; while its struggle for freedom of speech, unpopular with some to be sure still reverberates none the less in our midst as its echoes are even now being heard in the halls of the Dominion legislature at Ottawa.

Thus it is another notable event that finds the Fellowship of Reconciliation repeating its most successful Spring Conference of last year. The program, in part, consists of the Annual Meeting and Conference to be held respectively on Saturday and Sunday afternoons at the Unitarian Church on Jarvis Street; a retreat and fireside discussion at Hogg's Hollow on Saturday evening, and a public meeting on Sunday night at Carlton Street United Church which will end an eventful and, we trust, will begin an even more gratifying year with an inspirational address by the popular, prophetic, and gifted radio preacher of Station W. G. R., the Reverend H. J. Hahn of Salem Evangelical Church, Buffalo, New York.

We do hope that some few at least of our own brethren will manifest their interest in so worthy and forward looking a cause by attending these promising sessions.

COMMENTARIES

By Rabbi HARRY J. STERN, of Montreal,
Associate Contributing Editor

DO THE RICH GIVE CHARITY?

Abraham Epstein, writing in the American Mercury for May, asks the above pertinent question. He believes that there has been created a myth, a noble myth about the inherent munificence of American philanthropy. But the facts prove otherwise. He maintains that it is high time to examine the truth of such bold claims that "the rich are taxing themselves in order to give employment; that they are giving not because they are compelled to but because they desire to be as helpful during a crisis as it is within their power to be."

Epstein points out that a few rich men in the U.S. have shown unparalleled generosity in these critical days; the masses of the well-to-do reveal parsimoniousness. Thus he states:

"New York City is unquestionably by far the most generous community in the country. It is also the richest city in the world. In half a dozen of its wealthier streets there reside over 50,000 people with incomes far beyond the most extravagant needs. In Manhattan alone, 357,825 persons filed income tax returns in 1928. Yet only about 10.000 persons in Manhattan and the Bronx, or about one in forty income tax filers, contribute to the Association for the Improvement of the Condition of the Poor, one of the city's most effective charitable societies. . . . . .

"The Jews have the reputation of being great philanthropists, yet only 32,000 out of a population of 900,000 Jews in Manhattan and the Bronx support the ninety-one charitable institutions directed by the New York Federation for the support of Jewish Philanthropies Societies."

Mr. Epstein to prove the stinginess of America's rich properly quotes a letter written by Senator William E. Borah to a New York banker in reference to the recent Red Cross appeal. Borah writes:

"Let me tell you where the disgrace is. The disgrace is that the Red Cross was unable to secure from the vast wealth of this country sufficient funds to take care of the situation. There are a dozen estates in this country whose immeasurable wealth could have raised $25,000,000 for these suffering people, and have given it to the Red Cross without ever being disturbed financially or economically.

"What have you and those who are criticising Congress done toward discharging your duties in taking care of your fellow-citizens? Have you been as fond of writing letters urging contributions to the Red Cross as you are of sending letters to those whom you are criticising, who fell under the necessity of doing something?

"I was informed the other night of a meeting of business men who, it is said, agreed among themselves that it was a great mistake to make this contribution from the Federal Treasury. I made an estimate, according to the best figures I could get, of the worth of these men who were there assembled. Their wealth was as huge as the suffering of their fellow-citizens was appalling. Yet they met and criticised the Congress and went home without contributing one single dollar to the Red Cross. Where is the shame in this instance? Is it with the Congress which has made the attempt, or with those who have their untold millions, and seem unwilling to feed, even in a scanty way, hungry women and children?"

Now perhaps it may be argued that during life time America's well-to-do are not generous — but when they depart from this world they certainly bequeath vast fortunes to charity. That too, proves Mr. Epstein, is a fiction. Why? Here are the facts. "In the eighty-five years existence of the New York Association for the Improvement of the Condition of the Poor, it has received but 264 "legacies, funds and gifts". The Brooklyn Bureau of Charities, which dates back to 1866, has received bequests of legacies from only 135 individuals, and only 155 have been made to the New York Federation for the Support of Jewish Philanthropic Societies."

The concluding paragraph of Mr. Epstein's stimulating essay is challenging in every way:

"Indeed, when we talk of caring for unemployment and drought by private philanthropy, we talk nonsense. Private philanthropy is confessedly unable to meet the present situation. It will never be able to relieve the growing difficulties inherent in the industrial order, and it is also seriously objectionable for another reason. Under this system the burden of social ills falls almost entirely upon the few generous rich and the bulk of the poor wage-earners, who cannot refuse to give to charitable appeals when the boss asks them to contribute. It is altogether contrary to the modern principle of a fair proportional distribution of the burden. The bulk of the well-to-do escape entirely from paying their share."

The Enemy's Gates

By Richmond Barrett

By Special Arrangement with Boni and Liveright

Weakly Ann tottered over to the bed and sank down on it. "George, we've got to look out or we'll simply lose our minds," she gasped.

In a hunched misery, he blundered past her, took his shoes up from the floor and threw himself into a chair. For a long moment neither spoke: Ann stared straight ahead of her; George glowered at the shoes in his hand.

At last she got up and walked across the room to his side. "George — you don't really think I've stopped loving you?" she whispered. "You can't believe that?" She touched his shoulder.

Without a word, he brushed her hand off and got to work putting on his shoes.

"I wish to God I'd never seen you," he muttered, tightening the laces. Under the strain of his impatient tugging, one of the leather strings broke in two. That brought him to the end of his resources. Covering his face with his arms, he burst into hysterical sobs. "Oh, I wish to God," he cried in a strangling torment, "that I'd died before I ever saw you."

A voice that Ann could not recognize as her own, that sounded faint and bodiless as an echo, broke all at once into lamentation. "Oh, George, George, what's to become of us?" the strange voice went wailing through the room. "What's to become of you?"

PART V

CHAPTER XV

Morton had spent a characteristic and irritating day. In the morning, he had fretted away two hours on the third chapter of his novel. A month ago, he had informed his friends that he had at last found himself ripe for creative work. The period since he had been graduated from Yale might have seemed to the casual observer elegantly and brightly empty; as a matter of fact, it had been a time of rich gestation. Like Milton, he was beginning late; like Morton, too, he had plucked a few "berries harsh and crude before the mellowing year" — these in the form of sonnets for "Vanity Fair" and "Harper's Bazar." He had sold one of the sonnets; the letter of acceptance had filled him with a civilized satisfaction. When the poem appeared on the very last page of the magazine, he had been haughtily incensed; he had not even been included in the table of contents! He had been planning to compose a cycle of sonnets and to have them published in a beautiful volume under the title of "Cloisonné." Inspiration had begun to run thin in the middle of the fourth effort. The shabby treatment he had received from "Vanity Fair" turned him from verse to prose. He would sit right down and write a novel. It gave him a certain sardonic pleasure to think that the magazine had unconsciously helped him to a momentous decision. Had his poetry been appreciated, he might have gone on for the remainder of his days supplying the public with glazed and polished bits of bric-à-brac in fourteen lines. So sure was he of his powers, so serene in his belief that he needed the "larger medium" for adequate self-expression, that he had taken his whole world into his confidence. "The novel will keep me busy for about eight months. It will be out in a year." That had been his first published bulletin. Now, at the end of four weeks of arduous toil, he was beginning to wish he'd made a profound secret of his literary labor. The first chapter had been a marvelous tour de force — sixteen pages of epigrams in a notebook, with the author occupying the center of the stage; it had resembled, in many ways, the beginning of "Diana of the Crossways." The second chapter had gone well — though with less of a romping dash. It had described in minute detail the heroine's wardrobe and the furniture of her house. Morton had gracefully consented to share some of the honors with her. The third chapter enfuriated him. The novel was to be a cruel study of marriage; the first book must end with the wedding of the principal characters. That wedding had no terrors for him: the gowns of the bride and bridesmaids were distinct in his mind, almost palpable to his touch. The ceremony couldn't come off, however, till there'd been at least one strong love scene. His glib cleverness failed him the instant his manequins had to succumb to a human passion. They couldn't feel it; they refused point-blank to be pushed into each other's arms. He therefore arranged a brilliant dinner party. The hero and heroine didn't even sit side by side; across the floral decorations,

"Sometimes when people censure me,
I tell them without rancor,
That for what it cost me to be free,
I might have had an anchor."

Quota by quota, campaign by campaign, modest drive by modest drive, the spring began and continues. The ground work is even being laid now for October bazaars and November food sales, so provident and so enterprising are the good souls who think of others far ahead. Every effort is being made by campaigns to get the money before the summer comes and scatters people or touches those who remain with inertia. To be sure in some certain parts of the country it is not only the money that is sought but the high sounding pledges which seem to comfort and stroke the ego of the go-getters even when it is certain that the pledges will never hatch out into anything recognizable as coin of the realm.

Into the ears of the contributor class Duty calls from so many corners that she must be a ventriloquist. In desperation the contributor becomes cock-eyed and dizzy turning from one call to the other. All of them are right, all of them are worthy, all of them are legitimate calls for help and, alas, all of them seem to have his name. Besides money is tight. For once this state of things is an aid to making a decision and the contributor finds the call of Duty clearest when it is raised in the interests of the poor Jews right here at home at the door-step of each Jewish community in Canada. If he is a practical person he is not misled by the kindly suns and clouds and skies of a beautiful May into thinking that the poor are no longer in need because the weather is balmy. General conditions remain the same as to want, the need for shelter, food, holidays to keep youngsters off the streets and out of trouble, rest for the underprivileged.

These human demands call for Federation pledges to be paid before vacation languor envelops the givers and before they commit themselves to less pressing causes. There is no responsibility so urgent as the responsibility which the more fortunate should feel toward the less fortunate among them. If you must be thrifty by trimming your list of contributions to the bone at least take care of your obligation to the poor first and then talk economy in donations. The payment of this debt promises you nothing except the knowledge that you have done your duty in the performance of a mitzvah. There are no fireworks, no stage performances in public view. But a clear conscience should have its place in the list of things necessary to the public-spirited individual. Before saying good-bye to bricks and heat for pleasure and a change of scene, before paying or making any other pledge, keep your promise to the poor. It should come ahead of any other communal obligation for any purpose. Practical common sense says that the care of the needy in your own community should precede out-side luxury in giving.

In last week's Review Rabbi Stern spoke with elation of the fact that many thousands of Protestant ministers want the church to go on record as refusing to support any future war. This optimism seems premature by as many years as intervene between the present time and the next awful conflict. For what will these same ministers and also the peace-preaching rabbis of to-day say when there is actually war? It is the easiest thing in the world to be in favor of peace in time of peace. In time of war one of the hardest things in the world is to be in favor of peace and to speak out about it.

Several years ago when Rabbi Stephen Wise declined to take part in Defence Day in the United States he excoriated those ministers and rabbis who preach peace in peace time but are later found supporting the government when the country is at war. In the last war how many ministers and rabbis steadfastly exhorted their congregations to refuse to take up arms or support the war in any way? If they ever intended doing it war time was their big opportunity. Instead they stood by the gallows and spoke what they hoped was a word of comfort to the doomed. It took less courage to do that than to run the risk of forfeiting their pulpits. But perhaps it is too much to expect of clergymen to sacrifice themselves so unquestionably as they must when they preach in war time the refusal to bear arms. However, to be consistent with what they must know their attitude would be in war time, they should not swagger in time of peace.

This column is unalterably opposed to war, even a war of defence. All Jews are so opposed to war that it is almost impossible to find one who has the Gentile zeal for sending a son by music to front-line trenches. To fight for a country is not their idea of true patriotism and any one who differs with this opinion is not saying what he really thinks. To try to keep a country out of war would be more like the Jewish idea of patriotism. Jews are thrilled when the country they love is at peace, not when it is triumphant in murder. All of this is easy to say now. This country is not at war and the above statement of fact does not jeopardize the Jewish position or this column or this paper. But in war-time if the government were to oppose the expression of such an opinion in the public prints and if it were harmful to the Jewish position and this paper to call on its readers to refuse to go to war, rest assured that to speak this way would take more fool-hardiness or more courage or whatever you want to call it than this column has. In the same way the rabbinate and the ministry, although indelibly committed to peace by the very nature of their teachings, would also dislike the prospect of suicide. F.F.C.

they plighted their troth — jestingly, elliptically. And Morton realised, to his bleak despair, that the scene rang false. He was evading the issue. These detestable creatures (his early affection for them had not survived the month's intimacy) couldn't continue forever with a dinner-table between them. Once he managed to get them married, they'd have to come closer than that. A bitterness crept upon him. Everything he touched was converted on the instant to the hardness of a precious stone. Till now, he had enjoyed making of his earthly surroundings a sort of valley of diamonds; but the universal mineral glitter was getting a trifle on his nerves at present.

Sitting at his immaculate desk, that morning, he had opened his notebook to a blank page and punctured the white surface of the paper with innumerable pencil-dots. He could not bring himself to read the love scene over; the enameled wit of the passage would have cracked and peeled off before his eyes, he knew, like the frosting on a cardboard cake in a baker's window. He longed to lock the manuscript up forever in a drawer. Unfortunately, he couldn't treat it as an untimely birth and inter it hugger-mugger. People would ask annoying questions; they were already asking them. "How's the novel coming?" "Are you planning to place it serially?" If he let it die on his hands, he would have to give it some plausible public obituary. So he stared at the empty page before him and endeavored to think up the memorial speech.

He lifted his scornful eyes to the vase of freesias at his elbow, decided the effect wasn't just right, pulled out a branched stalk and threw it into the waste-basket; then he shook up the remaining blossoms to a more fluffily negligent arrangement and nodded his satisfaction. He moved the vase six inches to the right, pondered, pushed it back three inches to the left. There — that was where it belonged. He noticed a spot of ink on the heavy silver pentray; he had scolded Marshall yesterday about the disreputable condition of his desk; Marshall was getting more and more slipshod.

Putting the blank book away, he got up and looked around the room in quest of other telltale signs of the servant's incompetence. He found nothing out of place, nothing with a grain of dust upon it.

"Marshall!" he called loudly.

The man scuttled at once out of the bedroom, sideways like a crab. "Yes, Sir." His shirt-front directly faced Morton; but inside his clothes, his body seemed to have been twisted half around. His head come out of his collar at an oblique angle and turned with stiff automatic jerks to meet Morton's glance.

"I want that desk clean by to-morrow morning." Morton was icy. "I'm tired of picking my way among blots when I work."

He sailed into his bedroom, took off his coat and waistcoat, painstakingly straightened his cravat before the mirror, then untied it.

A half-hour later he emerged, a discreetly perfect fashion-plate, swinging a walking-stick in one hand, with the other plaiting his muffler over his chest.

"I shan't be back till six-thirty," he told Marshall. "If there are any telephones, mind you get the messages correctly."

He lunched in solitary state at a smart restaurant and went to the Thanksgiving matinée of "Gotterdammerung." The Metropolitan exasperated him these days. Fremstad herself couldn't have carried to success that particular performance, so stodgy, so mildewed by routine it was. And the scenery — good heavens! As for the Rhine maidens — when they began their heavy hobby-horse burlesque of swimming, Morton laughed aloud. He was at once hissed by the perfect Wagnerite on his left.

Turning to the man, Morton remarked with biting distinctness, "If you must hiss, pick someone who doesn't know his 'Ring.' I've laughed at the Rhine maidens all over Europe; and in Europe they manage these aquatic stunts better than they do here."

The man threatened to call an usher.

"Do," Morton urged. "Every usher here knows me. I've had season seats since I was five years old." Whereupon his opponent subsided and hissed no more.

In the crush at the Fortieth Street entrance, after the performance, Morton almost collided with Jessica. She had not noticed him. She was fighting her way along through the narrow channel in the crowd that Philip Heilmann had opened for her. A brazenly splendid Heilmann motor had just drawn up at the curb. Morton stepped back to let her pass; he made no attempt to speak to her. She swept on through the lobby like an operatic temptress — like some disreputable contralto who has just finished singing Venus in "Tannhauser" and is hurrying off to a rendezvous. Morton was utterly disgusted with Jessica. He still nodded a scandalized head at her in restaurants; but he had given up calling on her. Any woman who appeared in public with Philip Heilmann was outside the pale of decency. Jessica was being talked about. Morton had therefore washed his hands of her.

"Any telephones?" he asked Marshall the moment he got back to his apartment.

"No, Sir — none." Marshall looked scared, as if he were at fault.

Morton bit his lip. "Strange!" he commented.

Without bothering to take off his coat or to unhook the cane from his arm, he sat down at the telephone. In fifteen minutes he had called six people. "Are you dining with anyone to-night?" he would ask in a bright bullying tone. Then, "Oh — you are. Well, how about to-morrow? — When will you be free? — I see. You'll call me. I do want to have a talk with you, you know."

Woman Leader in Palestine Speaks Here

Women of Palestine no longer occupy the background in the picture of daily life — Palestine has been converted from a man's world into a world where men and women work side by side in the task of rebuilding the Holy Land as the Jewish National Home. This was the keynote of an address delivered by Chana Chizik, leader of the Pioneer Women of Palestine, Thursday afternoon, May 7, at Zionist headquarters, under the auspices of Montreal Senior Hadassah. Mrs. Rosa Singer, president, presided. Chana Chizik has participated in the work of redemption of the Holy Land for the past 25 years, and has become recognized as the champion of women's rights in that country.

Tracing the emancipation of the Jewish woman from the days when she occupied a menial position somewhat similar to that of the Turkish woman before she was enfranchised to the time of the First Zionist Congress, held in 1897, the speaker pointed out to her interested hearers that the Zionist movement gave impetus to the development of the then young movement for franchise among Jewish womanhood.

"Today," she continued, "we are the co-workers of our men. We cry 'One job, one work for man and woman.' We too drain swamps as they do; we, too, dig ditches, work in the fields from early dawn to sunset. No task is too hard for us, inspired as we are by the ideal of a homeland. All this we do, in addition to our manifold home tasks, and it is with great pride that we can point to our achievements during the past 25 years." Mrs. Chizik went on to describe the work of Canadian Hadassah in Palestine, its support of the Jewish National Fund, the Jewish land-redeeming agency in Palestine, and its maintenance of various institutions, such as the Canadian Hadassah Agricultural School for Girls at Nahalal. She gave a graphic picture of Palestine as it stands today, with its thriving cities, its developing industries and its many health and educational institutions open to all, regardless of race or creed.

Herself a worker and a speaker, Chana Chizik urged Canadian Jewish women not to refrain from participating actively in the political aspect of Zionist work. "You will have an excellent opportunity to determine the future policy of the Zionist question, at the coming World Zionist Congress, which will be held at Basle, June 29. See that you are well represented, and by delegates who will voice your desires and your views."

Prior to Mrs. Chizik's address, a business meeting of the Montreal Hadassah Council was held. It was announced that local Hadassah will postpone its annual Palestinian bazaar, which is usually held in the early autumn, until the following spring, owing to the Montreal Talmud Torah bazaar in October. THE ENEMY'S GATES

He gave it up at last and dined alone. There was nothing for it, he supposed, but a concert afterwards. He consulted a newspaper. The "Eroica" Symphony, the "Prelude" and "Liebestod" from "Tristan"! New York was simply rusting out. It was not the place for a civilized man. He began to toy with the idea of settling for good in Paris or Rome. Wherever he went, he was bored; but he could still obtain some satisfaction from expressing his ennui in French or Italian.

He did not go to the concert at Carnegie Hall. He returned to his apartment at eight o'clock and read Schnitzler till bedtime. While he was undressing, he had a sudden inspiration: he was by nature a dramatist, not a novelist; of course, he was born to write plays. To any queries about the novel, he could simply make this graceful answer: "Why, I'm turning it into a three-act satirical comedy. The novel is almost an obsolete form — it says muddily in seventy thousand words what a play tells with perfect clarity in twenty thousand. I've found myself — really found myself now." He lay awake for hours, composing brilliant dialogue for his first act. The long days of hollow discontent, that had been holding him imprisoned of late, were over; he no longer felt as if the sky were a great inverted bowl of brass clapped down over his head. He could scarcely wait for morning and for the hours of electrified inspiration at his desk.

He had written two thousand words by noon — and, when he read them out, to the accompaniment of elaborate stage-business, he hadn't a doubt that the curtain had been rung up on a masterpiece.

Seizing the telephone, he triumphantly shouted a number at Central.

"Look here, Stone." The moment a voice answered on the other end of the wire, he pounced. "This is Morton Morgenthal. I must see you immediately. I don't care if you have another date for the evening. You've got to dine with me."

"Well, perhaps I can make it," the voice reflected. "Yes — I can." So tremendous had been Morton's determination that it had forced his friend to cancel then and there a fictional engagement.

"All right. I'll call for you at seven," Morton exulted. "We'll come back here later."

He gave Stone a regal dinner that night, whisked him over to his apartment afterwards and, as soon as he had him comfortably sprawled on the divan, with whisky and White Rock on a tabouret at his side, read him the opening pages of the play.

Stone made no comment till he had finished. Then, "Awfully neat — awfully pretty," he acknowledged.

"Yes?" Morton, it was obvious, expected much more praise than that. "Have you some criticism?" Stone would do well to keep any adverse opinions to himself his tone hinted.

"Not exactly." Stone shook an indulgent head. A laconic young man, with shrewd green eyes and an impudent nose and wiry hair as full of cowlicks as a terrier's pelt, he looked upon humanity in a half-affectionate disgust. A tousled aristocrat, a shambling scoffer, he took himself and his friends for what they were worth — deplorable cases for scientific investigation. His interest in Morton was admittedly cruel and cold-blooded. The minute he had him classified, he'd be through with him. Meanwhile, he didn't mind drinking whisky and eating delicious dinners at the Morgenthal expense. Stone's mother and father happened to come of fine stock — "splendid old families" were the words Morton used to describe them. The son considered that distinction sufficient to acquit him of any possible obligations, in his odd intimacy with Morton.

"It's very well done," he pursued in a slightly gritty voice. "But what I've always said about you, Morgenthal, I stick to."

Morton shrugged impatiently and glared at Stone. Stone's eyes, that resembled unripe sour gooseberries, glared back. But his mouth had a wry smile and his expression was unscrupulously pleasant. It was impossible to dislike young Stone. He had a genuine disheveled charm about him.

"Unless a man of your sort is a real continental — an active practicing continental — he's nothing," Stone rasped on cheerily. "You ought to try to overcome your exaggerated decency."

"And how, may I ask?" Morton was sharp.

"Go to bed with a woman once in a while — that's really what you need," Stone informed him.

"If I were planning to write bedroom farces, your advice might have its value," Morton snapped. "My idea is to be sophisticated — not cheaply risqué."

"You're trying to copy after Schnitzler." Stone gave him a sage crooked grin. "Well, you'd better turn to and act like Schnitzler."

"I fail to see the slightest resemblance between this play and anything of Schnitzler's." Morton was indignant.

"Oh, come, Morgenthal," Stone coaxed with a paternal gentleness. "You can't deny your master to me. The trouble is, you're denatured Schnitzler. But to go back a bit." He seemed to take it for granted now that Morton had reluctantly pleaded guilty to plagiarism. "Naturally I'm not telling you to run around and pick girls up on the street—"

"Whatever you're telling me, you might as well drop it," Morton broke in; "that is, unless it amuses you."

"It does amuse me." Stone, lying lax and disjointed and bland in his corner of the divan, admitted that he liked to hear himself improvise. "So I'll just continue for a few moments. Of course, you'd have to be immoral in the approved way — the swagger way. All right. Now, why don't you choose a girl out of that English musical show that's just made such a hit?"

Stone paused. Morton, his eyes fixed on the first page of his notebook, remained balefully silent.

"Take one of the principals, get her a nice apartment and devote a couple of nights a week to her," Stone pursued brusquely, making his advice sound like a recipe for some delicious dessert. "There'd be material for a gorgeous comedy. Study your own reactions and hers — get them down on paper. And you might find, in the end, that she'd made a genuine human being out of you. It's possible."

"I have neither the money nor the inclination," Morton shouted, still gazing at his neat dialogue. He was in a cold fury; his zest in his play had died; his latest inspiration had become just another rigid corpse, laid out primly in his heart.

"It's a shame — a dirty shame," Stone sympathized. "A man can't stay very long in the ice-box without getting frozen up for good. I believe she's your last chance — that English girl."

"The point of all this is that you think my play futile." With a disdainful shrug, Morton consigned the English mistress to oblivion. "Am I right?"

"You are," Stone promptly returned. "You can't hope to compete with a Viennese scamp unless you've been around a lot yourself.

"When you finish your whisky, I'm going to bed," Morton announced in peevish tones. An hour ago, he had expected this session to last till long after midnight; during dinner, he had seen himself shaking hands with Stone at three the next morning, had heard his friend's astonished confession, "Honestly, I didn't think you could do work like that. I admit I was skeptical. You've got off to a tremendous start. For God's sake, keep it up."

Stone finished his whisky at a single long draught and got to his feet. "Good night, then." He accepted his dismissal with serene sweet temper. Ambling over to Morton on legs that were a bit rickety, he shook hands. "You're a rather gruesome exhibit, Morgenthal," he stated with disarming candor. The scientific gleam was in his eyes; but his mouth had an expression of twisted, almost pained benevolence. "You're a wax-work out of the old Eden Musée."

Morton, stiffening to a transfixed hauteur at that kindly gibe, did indeed stand revealed, for the moment, as a rosy figure of lifeless woodenness. Stone, turning away, half believed that he was leaving behind a big handsome doll that would remain motionless forever, snobbishly domineering over an empty scene with a varnished stare.

CHAPTER XVI

The conservative relatives, who had for years disapproved of Jessica and warily watched her career, confided to one another that the Heilmann affair was just the sort of thing they had been expecting. No indulgent excuses could be found for her; indeed, it would not have occurred to her judges to seek for any. They had been looking to the day when she would bring disgrace upon her family; it had arrived at last and they indicated their satisfaction at this latest proof of their skill in reading character. Nobody condemned cousin Philip; a rich good-looking bachelor was always at the mercy of some unscrupulous woman. His unfortunate reputation served only to make Jessica's behavior appear more reprehensible; by going about with him, she was brazenly flaunting her own iniquity. That she was unfaithful to her husband was everywhere taken for granted.

George and Morton shared, to some extent, the view of the more distant relatives. Morton mercilessly condemned her. Had she betrayed Geoffrey according to the time-honored rules of civilized etiquette, it would have been shocking enough, in all conscience; but she was being immoral in a blatant vulgar way. She was showing off in public. Morton could not forgive that. By her abominable taste she had forfeited every claim upon his allegiance.

Beaver Hall—In 1800, fourteen years after the establishment of Molson's in 1786, Joseph Frobisher erected his summer home on the present-day Beaver Hall Hill. Here, the exclusive Beaver Club, which included in its membership the explorers Fraser and MacKenzie, met. The house which bore the name of Beaver Hall, was destroyed by fire in 1848.

Dominion of Canada 1931 Conversion Loan

Official announcement is made today of the terms of the Dominion of Canada 1931 Conversion Loan. This issue extends the opportunity to holders of Dominion of Canada War Loan and Victory Bonds now approaching maturity to convert their holdings into bonds extending over a further period of from 15 to 25 years, and marks what may eventually prove to be the greatest financial operation in the history of Canada — the refunding of the heavy volume of financial obligations incurred during the War period.

The offer does not involve the raising of any new money. Not a penny will be added to the national debt of Canada in consequence of the 1931 Conversion Loan. It is entirely a matter of exchanging existing bonds for other bonds of the Dominion. A total of more than one billion dollars of bonds reaches maturity within the next 3½ years. This total is made up of about $52,900,000 War Loan 5% Bonds due October 1, 1931; $73,300,000 Renewal Loan 5½% Bonds due November 1, 1932; $446,600,000 Victory Loan 5½% Bonds due November 1, 1933; and $512,000,000 Victory Loan 5½% Bonds due November 1, 1934.

Holders of bonds of these issues are being given the opportunity of continuing their investment over a longer term in the direct obligations of the Dominion Government. They will not lose anything in the way of interest payments or income tax exemption by exchanging for bonds of the 1931 Conversion Loan. It is explained that the new bonds will carry coupons entitling holders to receive up to the date of the maturity of their old bonds, the same interest payments and tax free privileges as they would enjoy if they held their War Loan or Victory Bonds until the actual date of maturity in each case. For the remainder of the term of the 1931 Conversion Loan Bonds, they will carry interest at the rate of 4½% per annum, which, in the opinion of leading investment bankers, is a comparatively generous return in view of the interest rates now prevailing in the London and New York markets.

Conversion applications are now being invited up to a total of $250,000,000 of the new bonds. It is announced, however, that the Minister of Finance reserves the right to increase or decrease this amount, in his discretion. Subscription lists will open today and will close on or before the 23rd of May, as may be decided by the Government.

Holders of the War Loan 5% Bonds maturing 1st of October, 1931, may exchange their bonds for Dominion of Canada 1931 Conversion Loan Bonds maturing November 1, 1956. The new bonds will not be subject to redemption before November 1, 1946, but from that date until maturity they may be called by the Government on any interest date on 60 days' notice, at 100 and accrued interest. The first coupon on these bonds will be for six months' tax free interest at 5% per annum, payable October 1, 1931; the second coupon will be for seven months' interest at 4½% per annum, payable May 1, 1932. All other coupons will carry interest at the rate of 4½% per annum payable half-yearly on the 1st of May and the 1st of November.

Holders of the Renewal Loan 5½% Bonds maturing 1st of November, 1932, may exchange their bonds for Dominion of Canada 1931 Conversion Loan Bonds, maturing November 1, 1957. The latter issue cannot be retired before November 1, 1947, but after that date it may be redeemed by the Government on any interest date on 60 days' notice, at 100 and accrued interest. The new bonds will carry regular coupons covering interest at the rate of 4½% per annum payable half-yearly on the 1st of May and the 1st of November. In addition to the regular coupons, these bonds will carry three adjustment coupons payable, respectively, on the 1st of November 1931, the 1st of May 1932, and the 1st of November 1932, for additional interest at the rate of 1% per annum.

Holders of the Victory Loan 5½% Bonds maturing the 1st of November 1933 are being offered the opportunity to exchange their bonds for Dominion of Canada 1931 Conversion Loan Bonds maturing November 1, 1958. These new bonds will carry interest at the rate of 4½% per annum from May 1, 1931, payable half-yearly on May 1st and November 1st. The first five interest coupons — that is, those due to be paid each six months up to November 1, 1933, will be tax free. In addition to the regular coupons, these bonds will carry five tax free adjustment coupons for additional interest at the rate of 1% per annum, payable, respectively, November 1, 1931; May 1, 1932; November 1, 1932; May 1, 1933; and November 1, 1933. The Conversion Loan Bonds maturing in 1958 will not be subject to redemption before November 1, 1948, but on or after that date they may be called at the option of the Government on any interest date on 60 days' notice, at 100 and accrued interest.

Holders of the Victory Loan 5½% Bonds maturing 1st November 1934 are being offered the opportunity to exchange their bonds for bonds of the Dominion of Canada 1931 Conversion Loan maturing November 1, 1959, which will carry coupons entitling the owner to interest at the rate of 4½% per annum, payable half-yearly May 1 and November 1, commencing May 1, 1931. In addition to the regular coupons these bonds will carry seven adjustment coupons for further interest at the rate of 1% per annum, payable, respectively, November 1, 1931; May 1, 1932; November 1, 1932; May 1, 1933; November 1, 1933; May 1, 1934, and November 1, 1934. The Conversion Loan Bonds due November 1, 1959, will not be redeemable before November 1, 1949, but after that date they may be redeemed by the Government on any interest date on 60 days' notice, at 100 and accrued interest.

The issue of bonds of the 1931 Conversion Loan is authorized by Act of Parliament, which provides that both principal and interest on all of the bonds is to be a charge on the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Principal and interest on the new bonds will be payable without charge in lawful money of Canada at the office of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General at Ottawa, or at the office of the Assistant Receiver General at Halifax, Saint John, Charlottetown, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary, or Victoria. Interest coupons will be payable without charge as they fall due at any branch in Canada of any of the Chartered Banks.

The Department of Finance announces that interim certificates in bearer form will be delivered in the first instance in exchange for all War Loan and Victory Bonds accepted for conversion. The interim certificates will be exchangeable at a later date for engraved definitive bonds. The Finance Department expects that the definitive bonds will be ready on or about the 15th of August 1931.

When the definitive bonds are ready it will be possible for holders to obtain delivery of coupon bonds in bearer form or of coupon bonds in registrable as to principal. These bonds will be issued in denominations of $100, $500, and $1,000. Fully registered bonds, on which the interest will be paid direct to the owner by Government cheque, will also be obtainable in denominations of $500, $1,000, $5,000, $10,000 and $100,000.

Applications to convert bonds will be received and receipts issued by any branch in Canada of any Chartered Bank and by recognized Canadian Bond Dealers and Stock Brokers, from whom application forms and copies of the prospectus containing complete details of the new bonds may be obtained. They will arrange for the conversion of bonds without expense to bondholders.

HAND TO MOUTH

Of all the diseases which afflict mankind, by far the largest percentage are due to bacteria, or disease germs — our invisible foes.

They are invisible to the naked eye, but are revealed by the microscope. They have been studied, and the habits and characteristics of some of them are well known. They have their individual peculiarities whereby they differ one from the other; some go singly, others in pairs; some are oval, others are rod-shaped; one likes one kind of food better than others do; and so the list might go on to a great length. While disease germs differ one from the other, they have points of similarity. For instance, they must get into the body if they are to cause disease, and most of them find their way in through the mouth. Another point which they have in common is that they are unable to withstand drying and sunshine. As a matter of fact, they die off fairly quickly outside of the body. To exist, they need moisture, warmth and darkness.

It is obvious, then, that it is desirable to keep disease germs from passing between our lips into the dark, warm, moist interior of the body where they have every opportunity to cause mischief.

One frequent way for this to happen is when the germs we have picked up on our fingers and hands get into our mouths because of the habit we have of touching our lips, of putting the fingers into the mouth, or of touching food with unwashed hands.

A considerable amount of disease is a hand-to-mouth affair. As we go about our daily routine, our hands are certain to become soiled. We shake hands with a person who has just coughed or sneezed behind his hand, or who has used his handkerchief that is soiled with secretions. We touch numerous articles which have been touched by other people with hands soiled by their body secretions. As our hands are usually warm and moist, these conditions favour the existence of the germs.

It does not matter if germs are on the hands as long as they stay there. The unbroken skin is a barrier to germs. The danger lies in introducing any germs which may be on the hands into the mouth or nose. This danger can be avoided if we make it a point never to put our unwashed hands to our faces, excepting when using a handkerchief, and never to touch food unless we have thoroughly washed our hands.

No matter how clean they look, the hands should always be given a thorough washing before meals or before preparing food, and they should be wiped on the person's own towel only. It is quite as dangerous to use a common towel as it is not to wash at all.

RABBI EISENDRATH

(At Trinity United Church, Cobourg, Ontario)
By Dorothy Choate Herriman

A rabbi preached in a Christian Church—
And the roof did not fall in!
The steeple did not sway or lurch,
Nor did the thunder din.
A rabbi preached in a Christian Church—
And all were still therein!

He spoke not strangely as one who strayed
From an age long passed away—
But free of mind and unafraid
As one who fronts the day.
He spoke not strangely as one who strayed,
But as one who sees his way.

The rabbi spoke as a prophet would,
Of the ways of grace and sin,
Of war and peace, of bad and good,—
A purging medicine.
The rabbi spoke as a prophet would,—
And he pricked the Christian skin!

The Christ he showed them, whose Name they bore,
And whose kindred blood was he,—
And told them they might less adore
Yet, more His servants be.
The Christ he showed them, whose Name they bore,
And His magnanimity.

A rabbi preached in a Christian Church—
And the structure stands to-day!
No stain it shows or sulphur-smirch;
It has no curse to "lay!"
A rabbi preached in a Christian Church—
And his faith did not betray.

'Twas Christ who said from the mountain-side,
"Not a jot shall pass away.
The Law and Prophets shall abide
Until the Judgment Day."
'Twas Christ who said from the mountain-side,
"The Law shall stand for aye."

Editor,
Canadian Jewish Review,

I am writing you this letter in the hope that it may reach those among your readers who may be of assistance in the following matter.

I am culling from Hasidic literature in Hebrew, German and other languages the ethical stories, the content and point of which make them appropriate for the special purpose I have in mind, namely, the publication in English of a volume with the general title of "An Anthology of Hasidic Lore" or "Ethical Tales of the Hasidim." Many Hasidic tales, however, are current only in verbal form and may be known to some of your readers by hearsay. It is these stories I am particularly interested in assembling for the volume I am preparing.

I would, therefore, be interested in hearing from anyone reading this letter who has information of interest to offer. Appropriate acknowledgement will be made in the collection for stories sent to me in this way.

Communications may be addressed to me at 7 West 83rd Street, New York, N. Y.

Sincerely yours,
(RABBI) LOUIS I. NEWMAN

Deaths

Saul Hartt, age 76, died Saturday, May 2 at 10 a.m. at his home, 5405 Esplanade Avenue. Funeral took place Sunday at 2 p.m. from Beth David Synagogue. Survivors are his wife, Malca Hyamovitch, one son Maurice Hartt, of Montreal, and five daughters, Mesdames S. Fargeon, N. Mandelker, M. Lebovitz, R. Garmaise, and Julius Oppenheim, all of Montreal; and 13 grandchildren. The deceased came from Roumania 24 years ago.

Walking down Park avenue Friday, May 8, at 3 p.m., Simon Garfield, vice-president of the Canadian Refining Company, Limited, collapsed suddenly and, at the Hotel Dieu, to which institution he was rushed, was pronounced dead of heart failure. He was in his 63rd year. Originally a precious metal worker from Ballystok, Russia (now Poland), Mr. Garfield came to this continent in 1912, founded the Canadian Refining Company in Montreal, in company with his two sons, specialized in the refining of precious metals, and saw his company grow until it became one of the leading concerns of its kind in Canada.

Born in Russia in 1868, Mr. Garfield plied his trade of metal worker there for a number of years, married Miss Annie Maimark, and sailed for North America in 1912. He lived in Brooklyn, New York for a number of years, then came to Montreal. Here, he set up a laboratory and a small refining plant, and in 1923, with his eldest son, F. H. Garfield, as president, and his younger son, Sam Garfield, as secretary-treasurer, founded the Montreal Refining Company, with offices at 254 St. Catherine street east, and a refining plant at 1275 St. Elizabeth street. Within eight years his business grew enormously.

He is survived by his widow and two sons, and by one daughter, Mrs. L. Naimer.

J. Shalinsky

The funeral of J. Shalinsky, 56 years of age, took place Sunday, May 10, at 4 p.m. from his home, 256 St. Joseph Blvd West. He was interred in the Bnai Jacob Cemetery. The service was conducted by Rabbi Herman Abramowitz, of Shaar Hashomayim Congregation, of which Mr. Shalinsky was a member of long standing. Cantor Katzman chanted the "Amolea Rachmim." Mr. Shalinsky came to Canada 38 years ago and established the tailoring business with which he was associated until his death. He was a vice-president of the Merchant Tailors Association of America and a member of Federation of Jewish Philanthropies, of the Hebrew Free Loan, the Immigrant Aid Society, Hebrew Sick Benefit, The Talmud Torah. "Your first idea was a good one"

When you bought your rag rugs and bath mats you chose colors that suited the surroundings—which is as it should be. If those colors are not as bright now as they should be, send them along to us and see what our soft water washing will do to them. Your pleasure will be our satisfaction. Of course, they can be done at home, but they are much too heavy for any woman to handle. Ask about our six different kinds of family wash service—all done in rain-soft water—at prices that please. Phone to-day—or stop any one of our courteous driver-salesmen.

Among Toronto Jewish Women

Mrs. M. Toker, 55 Springmount Avenue, who came to Toronto four years ago from South Africa, says: "Among the many charming women I have met since I made my home in Toronto, Mrs. Nathan Phillips, of 26 Lauder Avenue, is, to me, the most outstanding. One need only look at her to become immediately attracted; and upon better acquaintance one discovers that her lovely face is but a reflection of her character and personality. Free from any sort of affectation, her charm, kindness, intelligence, understanding and tact will at once put a stranger at ease. She seems never to lose patience with anything or anyone and is never rude no matter what the provocation. Her interests are varied. She is on the executive of the Regal Road Home and School Club; President of the Holy Blossom Sisterhood, Secretary of Ward Four Liberal-Conservative Women's Association; on a committee of the Council of Jewish Women and is affiliated with many other organizations both Jewish and non-Jewish."
